

筑波大学
University of Tsukuba

Located in the heart of Tsukuba Science City, Japan's premier science and technology hub, approximately 60 kilometers from central Tokyo, the University of Tsukuba is a leading national research-oriented university spearheading collaboration across organizational, industrial and national borders. With roots extending back to 1872 when it was founded as modern Japan's first national higher education institution, as the Normal School then as the Tokyo University of Education, the University of Tsukuba was reborn in 1973 as a "new concept university" that encompasses the fields of medicine, physical education, and the arts. In October 2020, we became a Designated National University Corporation that is expected to develop further our world-class education and research activities. Envisioning to create a future society beyond the SDGs, we will work towards a "true comprehensive university" that solves ever-emerging global issues by persistently creating new academic disciplines.
